

the 1990s, the number of people in the world who are illiterate has increased from 1.2 billion to 1.5 billion.

There are many reasons for this. One is that the population of the world is growing so fast that the number of people who are illiterate is increasing. Another reason is that the quality of education is poor in many countries, so that many people who are enrolled in school are not learning enough to be able to read and write.

There are also many people who are illiterate because they are poor and cannot afford to go to school. In many countries, the cost of education is too high for poor families, so that their children are forced to work instead of going to school.

There are also many people who are illiterate because they are women. In many countries, women are not allowed to go to school, so that they are unable to learn to read and write.

There are also many people who are illiterate because they are disabled. In many countries, disabled people are not allowed to go to school, so that they are unable to learn to read and write.

There are also many people who are illiterate because they are in remote areas. In many countries, there are no schools in remote areas, so that people who live there are unable to go to school.

There are also many people who are illiterate because they are in conflict areas. In many countries, there are no schools in conflict areas, so that people who live there are unable to go to school.

There are also many people who are illiterate because they are in poor countries.

There are also many people who are illiterate because they are in countries with a low level of economic development. In many countries, the economy is not strong enough to support a high level of education.

There are also many people who are illiterate because they are in countries with a low level of political stability. In many countries, the government is not strong enough to support a high level of education.

There are also many people who are illiterate because they are in countries with a low level of social development. In many countries, the society is not strong enough to support a high level of education.

There are also many people who are illiterate because they are in countries with a low level of cultural development. In many countries, the culture is not strong enough to support a high level of education.

There are also many people who are illiterate because they are in countries with a low level of religious development. In many countries, the religion is not strong enough to support a high level of education.

There are also many people who are illiterate because they are in countries with a low level of technological development. In many countries, the technology is not strong enough to support a high level of education.

There are also many people who are illiterate because they are in countries with a low level of environmental development. In many countries, the environment is not strong enough to support a high level of education.